

Health Affairs

Post On Health Reform And Medicare Tops May's HA Blog Most-Read List

June 3rd, 2011

by Chris Fleming

Chris Fleming

Thomas Saving's and John Goodman's post on the implications of the Affordable Care Act for Medicare leads the list of most-read Health Affairs Blog posts for May. On the list as well are posts on the hazards of ignoring the lessons of the Clinton years; the opportunities offered by clinical registries; and the implications of a new comparative effectiveness study. Posts on environmental health, the way the government sets physician payment rates, and the challenge of reaching those eligible for, but not enrolled in, public coverage programs also appear.

The full list, with links, appears below.

1. What Health Reform Means For Medicare, by Thomas Saving and John Goodman
2. Health Wonk Review: Memorial Day Edition, by Chris Fleming
3. The Shifting Health Care Landscape: Lessons From The Clinton Era, by Jeff Selberg
4. Clinical Registries: The Opportunity For The Nation, by Don Berwick, Sachin Jain, and Michael Porter
5. Stifling Primary Care: Why Does CMS Continue To Support The RUC?, by Brian Klepper, Paul Fischer, and Kathleen Anne Behan
6. New Answers On Macular Degeneration; Important Questions For Comparative Effectiveness Research, by Steven Pearson
7. Environmental Illness In Children Costs \$76.6 Billion Annually, by Chris Fleming
8. Public Coverage Programs: Solving the Enrollment Dilemma, by Alain C. Enthoven, Leonard Schaeffer, David Helwig and Phil Lebherz
9. Health Policy Brief: The CLASS Act, by Chris Fleming
10. Health Systems And Environmental Health: Reducing Harm And Costs, by Gary Cohen and Blair Sadler